Critical Perspectives on Impulsivity Research from Behavioral Economics and Vice Versa

This interdisciplinary meeting being organized conjointly by the International Society for Research on Impulsivity (InSRI) and the Center for the Economic Analysis of Risk (CEAR) will bring together researchers studying impulsivity from neuropsychiatric and behavioral economic perspectives.

The objectives of the meeting are:

1. To bring together scientists from multiple disciplines (behavioral economics, neuroscience, psychiatry, epidemiology) working in the area of impulsivity to promote interdisciplinary dialog.
2. To involve trainees and junior faculty in the meeting and encourage their future participation in research on impulsivity in addictions.
3. To encourage increased participation of minority, disabled, and women scientists and clinicians in the area of impulsivity through participation in this meeting.
